Mary Pickford in

"How Could You, Jean?"

Eleanor Hoyt Brainard wrote the story of "How Could You, Jean?" and Frances Marion made the scenario from it for Mary Pickford's Artercraft screen production, directed by William D. Taylor. Charles Rosher was the cameraman. The result is a disjointed but for the most part highly amusing screen story, with the star doing bits of broad comedy at unexpected moments. One of the most unexpected of these moments is when a wicked he-goat advances rapidly from the south while Mary is gazing north and charges her so viciously that she does a complete summersault before losing her momentum.

Miss Pickford has other funny bits of a less strenuous sort and a brief touch of pathos when she puts on the old-fashioned clothes that were worn in the long ago by her employer's daughter and soothes the last moments of the dying man. There is also a slight sprinkling of melodrama as Mary dashes into a burning barn and drags out the family cow, stern first.

"How Could You, Jean?" has an original heroine. Born and reared to great wealth, when her income stops and she is forced to earn her own living she takes stock of herself and discovers that the only thing she knows anything about is cooking; so she goes to an employment office and gets a job as cook. Not at the first attempt, however. It is only after she has dressed herself to correspond with the other cook-ladies and claimed to come from Sweden that she succeeds in getting herself hired out.

The Bonners, a scientifically inclined old couple too busy with bugs and beetles to attend to their farm, engage Jean to get their meals and do other odd chores about the place. The job would have frightened off any other poverty-stricken heiress, but Jean is one of those fortunate mortals who can get fun out of anything or anybody, and two lovers, five small children, a dog, the cow and the all-too-familiar goat furnish her with plenty of amusing material. One of her admirers is the Swede hired man and the other is young Ted Burton, the son of a millionaire. Ted is so much in love with Jean that he bribes the Swede to let him take his place on the farm. Such devotion is entitled to its reward. He is shown embracing Jean as the picture ends.

The construction of the story could be vastly improved, but its spirit is good, clean fun and the production reveals country scenes of quiet beauty that are refreshing to the soul. Mary Pickford's arch wink, radiant smile and deft comic methods are given full play in the character of Jean. Casson Ferguson, Herbert Standing, Spottiswoode Aitken, Fanny Midgley, Larry Peyton and Zazu Pitts are the leading members of the admirable support.

Enid Bennett in

"A Desert Wooing"

New York social life and Western civilization are again contrasted in "A Desert Wooing," a five-part Paramount picture written by J. G. Hawks and directed by Jerome Storm. Enid Bennett, the little Australian actress who was married recently to Fred Niblo, is the star. Most of the material is familiar, but the love story is interesting, and scenically the production has many moments of beauty. Edwin Willat was the cameraman.

Avie Bereton, the character played by Enid Bennett, is a young society girl whose mother and brother have about run through all the family possessions when Barton Masters, a western millionaire, arrives in New York and is introduced to the Beretons. Masters is smitten with Avie and marries her after a short courtship. The girl accepts the westerner solely on account of his wealth. Doctor Van Fleet, a man of good social position, little money and less morals, is in love with Avie and determines not to give her up even after she is another man's wife. The newly made wife has always been attracted by the doctor and is relieved when she learns that he and her mother and a party of friends are to accompany the wedding party to the Masters' ranch.

The young westerner is a strong, dominant character, and soon wins the respect of his wife. This feeling is rapidly developing into something deeper when Van Fleet takes advantage of Masters' supposed absence to force his attentions on Avie. Masters enters the room and gives the doctor a severe thrashing. He then drives him from the house. Thinking his wife is partly to blame, Masters sends all his guests away and makes her do the housework herself. The couple are fully reconciled after Van Fleet shoots Masters and Avie shows her devotion to her husband by stealing the doctor's revolver and compelling him to use his professional skill to save Master's life.

Enid Bennett's part is much stronger than any she has yet played. Her youth and beauty are quite as valuable as ever and she is very much in earnest in everything she does. Her expression of emotion is limited at present, but the charm of her personality goes a long way toward making up for the defect. Jack Holt rides and acts Masters with dash and spirit. Donald Macdonald as Doctor Van Fleet, John P. Lockney as "Keno" Clark, Charles Spere as Billy Bereton and Elinor Hancock as Mrs. Bereton are all excellent.—Advt.

TO RECONSTRUCT IDAHO'S ENTIRE SCHOOL SYSTEM

BOISE, Idaho, Dec. 27—(By Associated Press.)—Idaho's system for grade and high schools is to be revised and reconstructed at a conference of county superintendents and school principals which will be held here today and tomorrow. The special object of the conference is a rearrangement of the public school curriculum so that it will meet the needs of the reconstruction days which will follow the signing of the peace conference.

Special plans also will be discussed for vocational training for teachers which will coincide with the annual meeting of the State Teachers' Association. Recommendations for necessary new school legislation will be framed for submission to the state legislature when the bi-annual session of that body opens on January 6th.
